the third of the tenth moon. The date being near at hand, preparations are being hurried. It is a pretty sight to see the whole narrow line of a sombre Chinese street filled with uniforms and flags. Blare of trumpets and rattle of artillery waggons accompany the movement of the troops towards the parade ground. The old and the new wespons are used side by side, though the old are being gradually ousted. We do not see as was the case a few years ago, those huge old contrivances in the shape of blunderbusses which it took two men to fire, one man to ast as shoulder rest, the other to pull the trigger! But the autiquated souther and pitchforks are still used, and one prominent men striped like tigers with small round shields, whose duties are to perform strange gymnastics amidst tiger-like howls, and to conclude with a complete comercialt before crouching down behind a testude formed of their shields. red fort opposite the Concession has also exercising its troops and firing some of its big guns, and for several days twenty or thirty of the native gamboats have made the river gav with their naval manosuvres, brilliant with flags and hideons with tomtoms. It is understood that the parade ground is too small for the intended review, and for fear of accidents or disturbance it is proposed to hold it in the open grounds to the south of the city, where the cavalry will have room for their evolutions. The troops have been during the last two rears more vigorously practised at the rifle butts. There was great consternation when Chang Chih-tung first arrived because he ingisted that all military officials should be able to his the target. Some Cantonese brought with him military graduates, adepts at bow and arrow or at hurring the huge metal mace, managed to score a single hit amongst three hundred shots contributed by the whole crowd! They came next day by deputation to the writer. who, though a man of peace, is supposed to be an Admiral Crichton of war, science, fortunetelling, prophecy, machinery, etc., etc., and laid their sorrows before him, gravely asking whether it wouldn't be wise to buy a large magnify.

ing glass, such as scholars use for small print books, to fix on the rifle sights in order to ousure accuracy! There is every reason to believe that notwithstanding the best advice the experiment was tried. I his however was two years ago, and no doubt it is now not quite safe to stand straight before the bull eve when military officials are firing at a hundred, ya ds. The provincial military examination begins on the seventh day of the tenth moon, and will last for a couple of weeks. The officials are diligently enquiring into the cases of the thirty Kolao Hui men now in durance. These used to be able to walk to the vamon for examination; it is a grim comment on Chinese judicial modes that most of them have to be carried now. Poor wretches: the one comfort is that, even if the Kolao Hui be quite innocent of China's present troubles, most of these prisoners are really the bad characters of their neighbourhoods. who more or less deserve heavy punishment. velvet shop at Hankow for distributing antiforeign placards was recorded in your column-N.
